

Understan this Issue

Many people use multiple Telegram accounts simultaneously to grow their businesses. Doing this allows them to reach target customers at a very low cost, helping them expand without spending a fortune on expensive advertising platforms.

However, since these accounts are used heavily for marketing, they often get restricted or banned for violating Telegram's terms. To deal with this, some marketers use the phone numbers of their family and relatives to create accounts. Others buy a large number of new SIM cards just for Telegram, which significantly increases production costs and reduces overall profit. While some try to use virtual numbers from various platforms, this isn't a great solution either. These numbers often get frozen or stop working quickly, making them useless for long-term marketing.

Currently, the only reliable option left for a marketer is to buy new SIM cards using their National ID or official documents. But this is both expensive and limited. There really needs to be a better alternative for marketers that doesn't violate Telegram's rules.
